

SYNOPSIS of HRM:

In America, have we lost sight of what it means to be human? The history of African Americans being slaves and having no rights in America has and still influences the minds of not just African Americans, but all Americans. Not only does it seem like we are conditioned to focus on race, which stops us from growth, but also conditioned to focus on wealth, materialism, the social 'norm', etc. Could it be possible that America put barriers on us that prevents us from uniting and moving forward? Is it really, "All power to the people" or is it, "All power to the few who control the people"?

In this short manual, those barriers that we separate/judge ourselves by are shattered and from the rubble, the truth has emerged:

"We all have worth because we're all human that have the potential to love."

With this truth, Americans will be enlightened to their ultimate purpose as humans and from this realization will spark the beginning of a movement:

The Human Race Movement!
